'Dear President Trump'

Some immigrant students write letters asking for 'the opportunity to demonstrate we are good people'

Larry Ferlazzo is a veteran educator who teaches English and social studies at Luther Burbank High School in Sacramento. He has written seven books on education and writes a teacher's blog. Recently, Ferlazzo wrote about the first day of school with his students -many of them immigrants- after Donald Trump won the 2016 presidential election.

By Larry Ferlazzo:

The morning Donald Trump was elected president of the United States, I knew there were going to be many students in my classroom who were frightened about their futures. I suggested that they write a letter to Mr Trump about their hopes and fears. These are two examples:

"I am a high school student. I am originally from Afghanistan. My family came here because it was too much fight there. During the election, some of the things you said made us feel really bad for myself and my family. I hope you will be nice and don't be racist". Asad.

"I am originally from Honduras. My family came here because there was a lot of violence in my country. I am grateful to this country because I am learning English and because I am safe here. My family and I hope you give us the opportunity to demonstrate we are good people, please". Maria.
